Overview

"I love being an IP attorney because I can collaborate with creators and business teams innovating in rapidly changing global markets. My business and legal training in Europe, Latin America and the U.S. allows me to approach innovative projects with a global view across different legal traditions. I strive to give clients solutions and options to resolve legal problems timely and effectively."

Angela Ramanauskas practice focuses on addressing legal issues while considering the impact of these decisions on the clients' interests. Angela manages extensive trademark portfolios and advises on strategies to select, register, maintain, transfer, and enforce trademark rights. She adapts quickly to new initiatives, people, situations, and subject matters. Her ability to collaborate efficiently also makes her stand out, in addition to her proactive approach in handling work.

Angela counsels governments, startups, and global companies through the prosecution process and on day-to-day issues, including indecisive matters, protection strategies, risk evaluation, and identification of practical and creative legal solutions. She excels at problem solving and developing optimal solutions.

Trained in both civil and common law legal systems, Angela has undertaken advanced education in intellectual property law and business administration, respectively, in Alicante, Spain and Lausanne, Switzerland. She was a consultant to the United Nations World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) in Geneva, Switzerland, addressing global intellectual property registration systems and law reform issues.

Prior to joining Fross Zelnick, Angela was an associate at the one of the most selective law firms in the United States. She began her professional Intellectual Property activity as a trainee at the Organization For A Geographical Indication (Gi) Network in Geneva, Switzerland, the Intellectual Property Tribunal of Peru and at a Peruvian law firm that has represented the IP portfolio of major global corporations.
